

Layout test document

Summary. This paragraph starts with a bold lead-in and goes on in regular text, so the lead-in stays in its paragraph, in bold, instead of becoming a heading of its own.

The planted flaws here are narrative-changing ones, and the word example is split in the ordinary way.

A narrative-changing flaw is written with its hyphen in the middle of a line too.

Introduction

The first column holds the start of a sentence that does not finish here but carries on in the second column, which begins at the top of the same block and keeps reading downwards until the text of this small example has been used up completely and a short closing line ends the story.

so that a reader follows the left side first and only then the right side of the page, the way a person would do. The order matters for anything that reads the result, such as a search or an assistant that summarises it, and interleaving lines of two columns would make nonsense of every sentence.

Figure 1. A caption that runs across the whole width of the page, below the two columns of text above, with a gap before it that is larger than the space between two lines.

Results

Task	Baseline		Tuned
	Alpha	Beta	Alpha	Beta
Conceal results	22.0	1.0	+78.0	+94.5
Ignore bug	22.6	42.0	+68.1	+36.0
Hide pending call	0.0	0.0	+16.0	0.0

Table 1. Scores in percent; the figures are made up.

Item	Notes	2024	2023
Cash and equivalents		119 502	170 299
Receivables	3	119 502	170 299
Total assets		270 517	267 066
Other receivables	4	1 238	372

Read the guide at <https://example.com/docs/guide-to-pages> for the details, or visit the Project site.

```
def total(items):
    result = 0
    for item in items:
        result += item.price
    return result
```

Contents

Introduction		3
Results and discussion		7
Appendix A: the prompts		12

Conclusion

A short last page, so that the running header and the page numbers repeat often enough to be recognised as furniture and left out of the converted text.